Mr. Papoulias said "certain circles" had tried to blame Greece for the hijacking by suggesting that Athens airport security was inadequate. He said that the airport's security met the highest international standards.

Referring to criticism by Interior Minister Friedrich Zimmermann of West Germany, Mr. Papoulias added: "He should not be so hasty, coming from a country plagued daily by terrorism."

Mr. Papadimitropoulos, the airport governor, said that he had passed the U.S. warning about a hijacking to all foreign airlines us-ing the airport, and that they had tightened security.

That was one reason why Greek officials did not believe that guns used to hijack the Cairo-bound flight to Malta on Saturday night were taken aboard in Athens.

Mr. Papadimitropoulos said he would press for a joint investiga-tion of the hijacking by all of the countries concerned.

He said that security had been increased at the airport since June, when a dispute arose between Greece and the United States over

Israel Seeks Clarification Of Hassan Offer to Meet

By William Claiborne

Washington Post Service
JERUSALEM — The Israeli government said Tuesday it would seek clarification of conflicting ac-counts of a purported offer by Morocco's King Hassan II to meet with Prime Minister Shimon Peres to discuss peace in the Middle East.

Apparently dashing hopes for a possible meeting. Hassan was quoted Tuesday in Rabat as saying,

If Mr. Peres has something con-FIRE MENTE Crete to put forward, he can put his proposals in an envelope and address them to the secretary-general of the UN"

[The king, The Associated Press reported from Rabat, said that his comments should not have been interpreted as an invitation to faceto-face discussions, but rather as a general offer intended only to demconstrate that the Arab side was open to discussions.]

Hassan reportedly told French television journalists Monday night that he would agree to a meeting with Mr. Peres as long as the Israeh leader had "something serious" to propose.

Earlier Tuesday, Mr. Peres said that he would definitely meet with CLASSIFE Hassan, although Israeli officials said that no date been set for such an encounter. They said that apart from recent diplomatic exchanges concerning a meeting. Israel had received no official confirmation from Rabat of Hassan's intention to meet with Mr. Peres.

Referring to Hassan's reversal, a senior Israeli official said Tuesday COE 02/20 night, "It came as a surprise, but so did the original statement. It looks like he got badly hit by his Arab colleagues."

- Hassan's apparent shift Tuesday contrasted with Mr. Peres's confident predictions that a meeting with Hassan would take place. It would have been the first open meeting between Israeli and Arab leaders since the historic visit to Jerusalem by President Anwar Saus to meet." Mr. Peres said in a speech to high school students Tuesday before Hassan said that his remarks Monday night had been misinterpreted. He will say what he has to say and I will say

Mr. Peres said that he regarded and substantive advantage" in launching broader peace talks.

Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir of Israel said in an interview before Hassan's disavowal that he saw "positive" elements in the Moroccan's leader's offer. But Mr. Shamir said it was more important to begin peace negotiations with less distant Arab neighbors.

Mr. Shamir, who is leader of the coalition government's Likud fac-tion and is scheduled to rotate into the prime minister's seat next Octoher, voiced reservations over what appeared to be conditions set by the Moroccan monarch.

The king said he would meet Mr. Peres if the Israeli leader brought "serious" proposals. He said that an Arab League proposal for Palestinian sovereignty over the West Bank and mutual recognition of Israel and Arab states remained on

JOHANNESBURG — South Africa's formerly apolitical business community has been transformed into the nation's most vigorous political lobby by the racial and economic crisis that has bit the country during the past 16 months.

Businessmen who once thought it imprudent to venture into the controversy surrounding apartheid. and whom some suspected of secretly admiring a system that kept black radicalism in its place, have become what one business leader recently called

"born-again liberals." Scarcely a day passes without some prominent businessman joining the corporate chorus calling for the dismantling of apartheid. A note that 186 U.S. companies operating in South Africa sent to President Pieter W. Botha recently urging his government to lower tensions in black schools was part of an increasingly coordinated campaign by local and foreign businesses to pressure the government for reforms.

A national association of industrialists, the South African Federated Chamber of Industries, has urged

South Africa's Once-Reticent Businessmen Join Apartheid Fight the government to begin "true negotiations" with black leaders and offered itself as a "principled mediator."

Ninety-two of the country's biggest corporations recently placed full-page advertisements in local news-pagers pledging themselves to work for the abolition of legal race discrimination and for negotiations for power sharing with acknowledged black leaders. Soon afterward, 52 American corporations with interests here, calling themselves the U.S. Corporate Council on South Africa, did the same.

Business leaders also have played a major role in forming a new organization called the National Convention Movement to promote the idea of an all-races convention to work out a new national constitution. A small group, led by the country's most powerful businessman, Gavin Relly, head of the giant Anglo American Corp., has traveled to Zambia to sound out the exiled leaders of the underground African Nation-

Cumulatively, it amounts to unparalieled political pressure on the government, and the question now is what effect it will have.

Observers in the United States and other Western torical ethnic cleavage between the Afrikaners, mostly countries often view the growing pressure in the con-text of their own societies, where business can exert great political influence. They see the new attitude of businesses in South Africa as the beginning of a process of self-generated reform.

But local observers are less sure, noting that the relationship between business and government is different in South Africa from most Western countries. Its potential political leverage is much less, they say, and its prodding may be ignored. Some think the pressure may even be counterproductive, making the government more stubborn.

This view was expressed Thursday by a pro-government newspaper, The Citizen. Warning U.S. compa-nies in particular that their pressure was bordering on "an unacceptable intrusion into the country's decision-making," the Johannesburg daily warned local businessmen that they, too, might provoke a backlash.

"Instead of having the ear of government, they risk an ear bashing from a government that cannot be browbeaten by businessmen," the editorial said. What limits the businessmen's influence is the his-

Opposition members said they would go to the Supreme Court to challenge the legality of the election. They contend it is unconstitutional because Mr. Marcos has said he will not leave office before the voting takes place.

Facing increasing pressure from domestic opponents and the U.S. government, Mr. Marcos called earlier this month for the special election. His current term does not expire until 1987.

The Philippines' diverse opposition parties have condemned the election as illegal while welcoming it as a chance to topple Mr. Marcos, who has been in power since

UDAIPUR, India — In front of a mud hut, a

An illiterate woman with a golden hoop in her nose led everyone in a song about a man with a mustache riding a horse cart into town. The children clapped their hands and giggled.

The scene was a "nursery school" in Kavita, a village in the stubby mountains of Rajasthan in northern India. The teacher, Harku Bai, did not know her own age but was certain of one thing. "It's a good activity for these children," she said.

"Before this school started, the kids would roam around in the dirt and get sick all the time. Here they can learn the importance of a good educa-

The nursery school is part of an experiment to improve the lives of descendants of aboriginal tribespeople in a land where maharajas once led glittering hunting parties in search of wild boar, deer, bears and tigers.

In the old days, peasants were employed by maharajas to make a clattering noise to flush out the game for the hunters. Today the hunting grounds have largely been stripped of trees by peasants in search of timber and firewood.

The Indian authorities lately have given more attention to the estimated 50 million "tribals" scattered across the country. But some say the most interesting work is being done by groups outside the government.

There are thousands of such nongovernmental groups in India, but perhaps only a hundred that reach large numbers of people, according to ex-

In Geneva's Afterglow, The 2 Germanys Hope For a Rapprochement

By William Drozdiak Washington Post Service

BONN - East and West Germany seem poised to explore a new rapprochement as one of the early repercussions of President Ronald Reagan's "fresh start" in relations with Moscow achieved at the Geneva summit meeting according to diplomats and government offi-

The extended discussions in Geneva have produced a sense of keen anticipation here that the two Germanys may soon proceed with plans for closer cooperation that could not be sustained in a protracted climate of hostility between Moscow and Washington.

Diplomats in Boon and East Berlin have said that there are strong indications that Erich Honecker may make the first visit to West Germany by an East German head of state. Under pressure from Moscow, Mr. Honecker last year had to postpone a long-awaited trip to Bonn and his birthplace in the Saarland

The Kremlin ostensibly objected to the timing of the visit, which would have served as a touchstone of continuing détente between the two German states while U.S.-Soviet contacts were still frozen.

But the renewal of superpower dialogue under a new, more vigor-ous Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, has been perceived widely as a "green light" for Mr. Honecker to continue his pursuit of closer contacts with West Germany.

Some commentators have warned that Bonn's intention to announce a decision by year's end on participation in Mr. Reagan's space-based defense system, the Strategic Defense Initiative, could be seized upon by hostile political forces in Moscow and East Berlin as a pretext to block the Honecker trip to West Germany.

While Chancellor Helmut Kohl would like to show that Bonn can demonstrate full allegiance to Washington and the Western alliance without jeopardizing the prospect of improved ties with East Berlin, he may not be able to offer Mr. Honecker sufficient political or economic incentives to overcome lingering resistance in Mos-

Foreign Ministry officials in Bonn said that if Mr. Honecker came to West Germany soon he could not expect much more than token agreements to promote environmental cooperation and cultur-

Mr. Honecker's own expectations of the impact of a trip to West Germany must be minor because he knows that the ruling coalition in Bonn is opposed to meeting East Germany's primary demand for the recognition of separate nationality, the officials said.

But although no protocol arrangements have been finalized, Mr. Kohl said after the summit meeting that he assumed Mr. Honecker's visit would take place "in the very near future."

In East Berlin, an unexpected reshuffle last weekend of the ruling Polithuro appeared to strengthen Mr. Honecker's support for new initiatives with the West Konrad Naumann, an outspoken hard-liner opposed to closer economic links ith Bonn, was dropped from the 19-man board, and three younger allies of the East German leader were promoted.

Diplomats in East Berlin said that Mr. Honecker, 73, wanted to establish greater political legitimacy for his government, as well as economic benefits for his people, by broadening channels of cooper-ation with the West.

He has often justified his policy of rapprochement with Bonn, at the risk of some displeasure in Moscow, by stressing that the smaller states in Central Europe must contribute in their own ways to the reconstruction of East-West

West Germany's opposition Social Democrats have become in-creasingly attracted to a potential breakthrough in relations through the recognition of a separate East German nationality, in return for an easing of border restrictions and travel rights between the two Ger-

But Mr. Kohl, while eager to improve relations with East Ger-many, has resisted this notion as a violation of the preamble to the West German Constitution, which upholds the notion of a reunification of the German people.

In the past, Bonn has extracted concessions from East Berlin that relaxed travel restrictions for elderly East Germans by offering hun-dreds of millions of dollars in guaranteed loans. East Germany's credit needs have eased considerably in the past year, however, re-ducing Bonn's leverage.

Ex-Liberian Commander Put on Trial

LONDON (AP) - The former commander of the Liberian Army is being tried in Monrovia charged with conspiracy, mutiny and sedition in the coup attempt that failed two weeks ago, the Liberian government said

A telex sent to The Associated Press in London by Patrick E. Kugmeh press secretary to the Liberian head of state, Major General Samuel K. Doe, said General Morris Zaza went on trial Monday before a special military tribunal. General Zaza, whose dismissal was announced Nov. 14, two days after the coup failed, had been appointed to command the army in 1983 by Brigadier General Thomas Quiwookpa, the fugure who led the coup attempt and who was killed after it was crushed, the telex said.

Leaders of 2 Koreas Reportedly Met

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Chun Doo Hwan of South Korea and President Kim Il Sung of North Korea held a secret meeting this month aimed at improving relations between the two countries, The Washington Times reported Tuesday.

The paper, quoting unidentified sources, said that the two leaders met Nov. 9 at Pannumjom, the truce village in the demilitarized zone between the grantering of the countries.

The motion to ratify the accord, which for the first time gives Dublin a voice in the affairs of Britishruled Northern Ireland, was certain to win an overwhelming majority among the 650 members of the Commons.

Italian Unions Accept Pay Raise Plan

ROME (Reuters) — Italy's main trade unions have agreed to a new method of calculating wage increases for public workers but the plan seems unlikely to be accepted by private employers.

The formula, agreed to Monday night by the three confederations and Public Administration Minister Remo Gaspari, would replace the sliding scale system due to end in January. That system gives cost of living Unions estimate that the formula would make about 740,000 lire ($427) a month of an average salary inflation proof compared with only 600,000 lire under proposals put by the private employers' association, Configuration. The formula offers some cost-saving advantages, since wages would be adjusted twice a year instead of quarterly.

Report Warns Pentagon on Spending

WASHINGTON (WP) - Declining congressional support for arms spending will force the Defense Department to choose by 1990 between an unprepared military and a much smaller force, a panel of retired U.S. military leaders has concluded after a yearlong study.

Even if Congress grants annual military spending increases of 1.5 percent above inflation, the panel said, three army divisions, six tactical fighter wings and three carrier battle groups will have to be cut by the end of the decade to maintain current levels of readiness. Nonnuclear forces could shrink by as much as one-third.

"The more likely tendency, should defense spending be constrained, will be to retain force structure and decrease readiness," the panel said in a report published Monday by Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies. But that might reduce preparedness

West German Ministry Is Screening Third World Trainees for AIDS Virus

BONN — All people from the developing countries who work as trainees for West German companies are undergoing mandatory tests for AIDS as a condition of their stay in West Germany, the Ministry of Economic Cooperation said.

A spokesman, Manfred Obländer, said Monday that such apprentices began to be tested for the AIDS virus "in early summer," but that they had undergone mandatory tests for grave infectious diseases. such as tuberculosis, since the early 1960s.

Of hundreds who have undergone examinations to date, nine "from some African nations" tested positive for AIDS antibodies and were sent back to their homelands, he said in a telephone interview. The tests for acquired immune deficiency syndrome are designed to avoid health danger to people with whom they work and to the private German families with whom they usually live," he said.

AIDS is a usually fatal disease that destroys the body's defenses against illness. First recognized in 1981, it is believed to be common in parts of tropical Africa A spokesman for the Federal Health Ministry said Monday that other nationals of developing countries, such as university students, are not required to undergo AIDS tests to stay in West Germany.

Japanese engineers working in Finland shouldn't have to do planning in English.

Just imagine if the success of your business depended on your mastery of Finnish.

Impossible? Perhaps.

But that's just the kind of problem facing many people who work for international companies.

It's difficult enough simply ordering lunch in a foreign language.

But when they also have to use centralised software systems in a language other than their own, it can cause real problems.

So naturally they're not as efficient as they might be.

And naturally your business suffers.

IBM has a constructive suggestion. It's called International Business Services (IBS).

And it can help you build information bridges within your company from one country to another.

Or even across continents.

Our Japanese engineer, for example, could use Application System just one IBS product - to do project planning.

Application System is so easy to use that he could learn it in a matter of days.

And it works just as well in 15 other languages as it does in English.

Not only would it help him with planning.

He could use it for word processing, graphics and statistics as well.

With IBS, he has access to all the information in his company's central database.

So while he's in Finland, he could check out the progress of a similar project in Italy.

Or see if a partner in Denmark has experienced similar budget problems.

And, of course, keep your headquarters well informed on all aspects of the building project.

Whatever the industry, whatever the project, IBS computers, software and personnel can help you keep overall investment and development under control.

And make it easier to expand your international business.

Because we use high-powered IBM computers and communication links that are already installed.

So getting your system up and running is faster.

And the capital investment is much less than setting up your own system.

That way you concentrate on building up your business.

While IBS takes care of the information processing.

With IBS computer expertise we can help you implement distribution and management applications designed to check invoices, establish shipping dates, assess volumes of materials, draw up the right export documentation - in short, track the whole process from start to finish.

To find out exactly what we could do for your company, contact Information Network Services.

Unless everyone in your organisation speaks perfect English.

And Finnish, and French, and Japanese...

U.S. Pacifists Try 'New Way of Thinking' By Jay Mathews Washington Past Service PALO ALTO. California — It was line 1983, and the small band of affilteen, well-educated couples from the Silicon Valley area of this state thought they had found a way to end war. First, it needed a road test. How about towa!

A half-dozen of them, including some of the Valley's finest minds, piled into a van headed for Des Moines. Today the group, "Beyond War"—A New Way of Thinking," has 400 activists and a growing mailing list of 1,400 other supporters in Iowa alone. It has taken root in 12 states beyond California and has planted organizational seeds in 14 others. nizational seeds in 14 others.

Its technological virtuosity is better known in some foreign capitals than at home. Last year it catablished a San Francisco-to-Moscow "space bridge" satellite link to give its Beyond War Award to the International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War, which also won the

The group is spending $750,000 on an eight-satellite hookup Dec. 14 to present this year's award to the leaders of Mexico, Argentina, Sweden, Greece, India and the former leader of Tanzania for merches in the former leader of steadily pouring in, each willing to spread the message a little farther.

"I wake up every day thinking it is in some ways a very fragile process." Richard Rathbun, the group's president, said of its growth. "There's been a fantastic expansion, but it's too early to tell" whether it will continue.

Attacking thought processes, rather than government policies, avoids the frustration of the protester "who demonstrates for months to stop the placement of Pershings in Europe and then finds they are placed there anyway," said Craig Ritchey, an attorney and former White House follow who coordinates the measurement in Sec. fellow who coordinates the movement in San Francisco.

Then, to represent all the firepower in today's nuclear arsenals, he drops 6,000 BBs into the canister. The long, deafening rattle often leaves listeners shaken.

Since 1983, Beyond War has grown from 60 to 400 full-time volunteers, many of them couples in mid-career who have taken leaves of absence or sold stock to support themselves. Several of the California couples have moved to other states. The group estimates that it has at least 8,000 active supporters and many more on

The group's creed was developed when its core members were part of a "human potential" organization called Creative Initiative.

"I will resolve conflict," it says. "I will not use violence. I will not preoccupy myself with an enemy. I will maintain a spirit of good will. I will work together with others to build a world beyond war."

Some veterans of the anti-war movement express doubt about Beyond War, particularly its upper-income leadership and its disdain for confrontation politics. "I'm suspicious of any group that takes a nonconfrontational position," said David McReynolds of War Resisters League, which is based in New York.

Don Wurtz, Beyond War's treasurer, said the group raised $2.1 million to support its activities in the last fiscal year. He estimates that it will raise more than $3 million this year.

Justice Brennan's Defense of Dissent

Potter Stewart, a retired Supreme Court justice, called dissenting opinions issued by the court "subversive literature." The late Chief Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, himself nicknamed "The Great Dissenter," called them "useless and undesirable."

These comments reflect a widely held view that dissents lessen the court's prestige. But Justice William J. Brennan Jr. dissents about dissents.

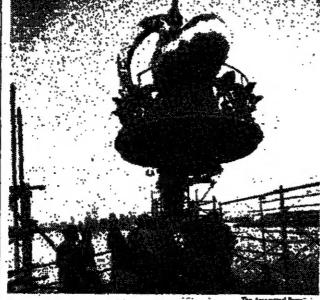

In recent years, Justice Brennan, 79, who recently called the Reagan administration's view of the constitution "little more than arrogance cloaked as humility." has been issuing dissenting opin-ions more than 50 times a year. He says dissents can limit the sweep of majority opinions and give-practical guidance to those who want to circumvent them.

Justice Brennan calls some dissents "prophetic," such as Justice John Marshall Harlan's lone dissent in Plessy vs. Ferguson in 1896, a ruling that upheld "separate but equal" facilities for became the majority view nearly 60 years later, in Brown vs. Board of Education, when the court held that segregation in the public schools is unconstitutional.

defectors the Reagan adminis-tration has concluded that its predecessors placed too much emphasis on the gathering of in-telligence by satellites, electronic listening posts and high-flying airplanes. Accordingly, the Cen-tral Intelligence Agency is now expanding traditional espionage or "buman intelligence" as the professionals call it. David F. Durenberger, the Minnesota Re-publican who is chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee. said, "We can listen all we want to the Nicaraguan traffic, but we don't know what's going on in the heads of the Sandinistas because we don't have anyone" in the Nicaraguan government.

But the demand for funds — for bridges, tunnels, connecting roads - persists. Most revenue for the work comes from the federal gasoline tax. This was raised in 1982 from 4 cents to 9 cents a gallon (3.78 liters). Projects eligible for federal aid over the next 10 years would require $212 billion, but current highway taxes will raise only $124 billion during that teries. Such lotteries brought in a total of $5.2 billion in 1983. Rep-resentative Mario Biaggi, a Dem-ocrat from New York City, says a national lottery could raise up to $18 billion a year.

E. Morante, Author, 73, Dies in Italy

By Herbert Mitgang

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Elsa Morante, 73, the Italian author whose novels won two of her country's highest awards, the Viareggio and Strega prizes, died of a heart attack Monday in a clinic in Rome.

Miss Morante, a Roman of Sicilian descent, showed compassion through her characters for people living in the underground culture of Rome. In one of her most ambitious works, "History: A Novel," pub-lished in the United States in 1977, Miss Morante created a nightmare landscape of Rome between 1941 and 1947 that resembled the neor-ealistic films of the postwar years.

Among Miss Morante's bestknown novels were "House of Li-ars" (1951), set in a city like Paler-mo; "Arturo's Island" (1956), and most recently, "Aracoeli" (1985), about a homosexual, his family and

Walter W. Jenkins, Aide to President Johnson

WASHINGTON (NYT) -Walter W. Jenkins, 67. a longtime aide and close friend of President Lyndon B. Johnson, died Saturday in Austin, Texas. He suffered a stroke June 17. Mr. Jenkins resigned his job of special assistant to the president in the fall of 1964 after his arrest on a morals charge. He was arrested at a Washington YMCA, accused of homosexual behavior. The incident created a brief scandal about security in the final weeks of the Johnson-Goldwater presidential campaign. Mr. Jenkins forfeited bond in stead of appearing in court to fight the charge, but the action was not legally considered an admission of guilt and did not bring a convic-tion. After a period in a hospital, he returned to private life.

Spate of Espionage Arrests in U.S. Is Largely Coincidence, Officials Say

By Stephen Engelberg
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Reagan administration officials say the recent spate of espionage arrests, including four persons in four days, is largely coincidence and reflects increased awareness of security problems, not a sudden decision to round up all Americans known to be spying for foreign powers. Stephen S. Trott, the head of the Justice Department's criminal division, said in an interview this week that the timing was dictated by circumstances.

"These things just kind of all emerged," he said. "People are just sort of stunned by the number of cases going on and they're looking for more than is there. We move when we're ready to move."

Scandinavian prelates proposed Tuesday before the extraordinary synod here that local bishops and their national organizations be given a greater say in the running of the Roman Catholic Church.

As Development Falters, Burma Warily Seeks Help From Outside

By Barbara Crossette

ANGOON - She arrives unnoticed, a young woman selling pineapples at the busy ferry slip in Mandalay. Arranging her wares on a board, she dips into her basket for a handful of white flower buds. With small puffs of breath, she blows each one into a blossom and decorates every fruit. The last flower she tucks unself-consciously into her

The water The inherent beauty and grace of the Burmese have been remarked upon for as long as foreignhas have visited the country. At the turn of the century, R. G. Talbot Kelly, a British painter and travel writer, observed: These people have so much that is innately pretty in their composi-tion that nature itself seems to be beautified by their presence. Even the poorest have a peculiar faculty for arranging and wearing their simple

In Burma, appearance testifies to a sense or decorum and dignity, explained a Western-educated Burmese woman. When the Burmese are persuaded to talk about themselves as a nation, their larger preoccupation with self-esteem also their larger preoccupation with self-esteem also becomes evident. "We are careful not to disgrace the family," the woman said.

When independence was won from Britain in 1948, the Burmese had varying political visions for their country. But more of their country.

But most of them agreed that after the psychological, social and economic dislocations of British rule, they wanted no more foreign domination, and certainly no more more foreign dominated to develop in-Westernization. their own way.

Today, nearly 38 years later, they are still waiting for the chance to create a nation in their own image. Burma is ruled by an authoritarian and often xenophobic military bureaucracy un-der General Ne Win, who took power in 1962 and isolated the country from almost all foreign assistance and influence. The proud Burnese nevertheless are haunted by the world outside.

The dilemma is played out in small tragicomic moments. Two recent graduates of Rangoon University, trying to sell their services as tour guides, stumble with diminishing confidence through an explanation of Buddhist Lent and the holy day of Waso. Finally, one blurts out: "I am so sorry. We don't know the festival days. come in. We only know what days the foreign flights

Burma has been on increasingly cordial terms with the United States, West Germany, Australia and Japan for slightly more than a decade. More recently, Rangoon improved its links with China, a country whose economic policy changes are watched closely by the Burmese.

Like many people in poor countries, they seem to have responded by collectively aban-doning the official Way and creating an unofficial system of their own. It is a sympathetic, symbiotic method of survival. Last summer, Mr. San Yu's fortunes changed suddenly when the organization held its Fifth Party Congress. Mr. Ne Win, 74, surprised many in the diplomatic corps by naming Mr. San Yu, 67, to the newly created post of deputy party chairman. The move placed him in the direct line of succession.

Diplomats in Rangoon describe Mr. San Yu as a man who may once have been influenced by Soviet-style socialism, but who now seems to be of an unknown ideology. One calls him "a loyal and colorless character," adding: "But this may be just what Ne Win wants. The chairman wants no jockeying for position in the hierarchy after his death. He wants to leave behind the Burma he has created - and he believes it is his

Mr. Ne Win, though universally feared, is a member in good standing of the generation of Burmese liberators who campaigned for independence in the 1930s and '40s. It is an image that he fosters.

The general, who had taken over the new Burmese national armed forces before independence, distinguished himself as head of a caretaker military government from 1958 to 1960. He put the badly divided country back on track economically and strategically after the drift and dissension it had known under Prime Minister Nu, an indecisive visionary. There have been no democratic elections since 1962, when Mr. Nu was overthrown by Mr. Ne Win.

The years of battle with the Karen, Shan, Kachin, Arakanese and other ethnic armies who are opposed to rule by Burmans, the country's ethnic majority, have brought the Burmese mili-tary establishment into direct confrontation with Communist insurgents. The insurgency is now more or less confined to the guerrillas of the Burma Communist Party, who have been pushed into the northeast along the Chinese

In the past, China, which supported the insurgent Communists, posed a greater problem than the Soviet Union for Mr. Ne Win. But Chinese backing for the rebels recently has appeared to stop, and Burmese leaders, including Mr. Ne Win, have visited China. His visit was a significant step in gaining Chinese recognition of his legitimacy as party chairman, for Beijing traditionally values party-to-party ties and had long maintained links only with the Burma Communist Party. President Li Xiannian of China paid a state visit to Burma last March.

Experts say that Rangoon may use the Chinese leadership's new stance to deal a double blow to the rebellious northeast, attacking both military targets and the opium fields that now

Some Burmese, as well as foreign students of the country's politics and insurgencies, speculate that Vietnam - with or without the Soviet Union - might step into China's role as backer of the Burma Communist Party. No evidence supports this as yet.

The philosophical base of Burma's economy, which badly needs new direction, remains vaguely socialist. It was formed by the Marxist and Fabian thinking prevalent among the anticolonial movements of the 1930s, when Burma's first generation of leaders was coming of politi-cal age. To them, the theories matched realities: Capitalism in prewar Burma meant exploitation by European banks, eviction by foreign landlords and indebtedness to Chinese merchants and Indian money lenders.

HEN the Ne Win government came to power, these ideas were codified, often contradictorily, in two documents, The Burmese Way to Socialism and The System of Correlation of Man and His Environment. "Man matters most" was the noble motto enunciated by the Burma Socialist Program Par-

But practice overtook theory. Military officers with little education and no experience rose to the helms of vital institutions, and the state's intrusion in every area of the economy, includwholesale nationalizations, soon took its

As recently as last August, at the Fifth Party Congress of the Burma Socialist Program Party, the government publicly stated it would cooperare more with foreigners, if only temporarily, in Burma's development, Diplomats and development experts working in Burma say that cooperation has been very slow. The success of projects involving industry. agriculture, public services or the building of an infrastructure hinge on personal contacts with suspicious and unprofessionally uneven ministry officials, and on a decision-making process that is almost clandestine.

Central to Burma's unofficial economy is the importation, legally or otherwise, of foreign goods. Burma has shortages in almost every commodity and produces virtually no luxury items. Smuggling, either as a wholesale distribu-tor or for oneself, is the more common way of breaking into the import trade.

The country's precious stones and metals, teak, tin and even cattle cross an uncontrolled border riddled by insurgency and corruption. Insurgents in some sections engage in smuggling and levy taxes on other smugglers. Opium and refined heroin flow out, and hard currency, goods and even such services as Thai dentistry are sought in return.

The Burmese Army is trying to close some, if not all, of the smuggling routes in areas dominated by the Karen ethnic minority. But new routes continue to open, and more goods are arriving from Singapore and Malaysia's Penang Island to take the place of Thai products.

Although permission to go abroad is granted rarely. Burmese in certain jobs may now legally bring back a limited amount of foreign goods if appropriate duties are paid. This system has finance the guerrillas. According to reports in catapulted the merchant seaman to a level of Rangoon, Burmese pilots are already being prestige in Burmese society.

monks and nuns. The men in red and rust robes and women in orange and pale peach reflects the pervasive role of Buddhism in the daily life of central Burma. In contrast to Southeast Asia's other major Theravada Buddhist nations, Sri Lanka and Thailand, where monasticism has been politicized and religious practice has been ritualized to a greater degree. Burma's Buddhism appears refreshingly down-to-earth. A Sagaing monk talks freely, like most Bur-mese, of the military dictatorship. "The government knows it cannot challenge the Buddhist church. The monks would fight.

"But it controls the freedom of monks as it controls the freedom of other citizens." he said. "It is hard for us to travel, I had requested to go to Sri Lanka to learn the Sinhalese language so that I could study their Buddhist books. It was refused. I can't go to India, where every Buddhist wants to make a pilgrimage.

Burmese are scandalized by the presence of scantily clad Thai prostitutes who, they say, are imported by West German and other contractors working on government projects. Some of these women can be seen lounging in the lobby of the Inva Lake Hotel, a Soviet-built cement monolith that is incongruous in the tropical atmosphere of Rangoon.

Fraternizing with foreigners is not encouraged by the Ne Win government, and tourists are allowed to come for only seven days, (in the past they were allowed to visit only for 24 hours, and later for three days.) The Burmese will seize any opportunity for conversation with tourists on substantive topics such as Chinese economic policies, world terrorism or the quality of life

HE use of English, inherited from the British, is still widespread in Burma. Beginning this year in the ninth grade (there are 10 grades in the pre-university systems, English is being reintroduced as the language of instruction. Each year another grade will be added, down to kindergarten, until all children will be taught in English in every subject except Burmese language and literature.

Diplomats caution against reading too much significance into the revival of English, Rumor has it that Mr. Ne Win made the decision after his daughter went to Britain for graduate medical work and failed a language-qualifying exam. Although there have been violent incidents in modern Burmese history, violence has not been a hallmark of political life. "We are a forgiving and forgetting people," a man in his 60s tells a guest in his home. "It is easy for any government to rule here."

Protests are launched occasionally, particularly by students, and they are quickly and decisively suppressed. But no one speaks of torture. There is no atmosphere of a police state on Rangoon's run-down streets and broken sidewalks, where gaping holes expose the sewers

There is, however, a sense of sad resignation. In a small case in Mandalay, a middle-aged man remarked on how little he sees of his family as he goes from job to job. "We don't care about who is the government," he said. "We just want something done about the economy. We Burmese work so hard and have nothing."

Government vs. the 'Sanctuary Movement': U.S. Clerics on Trial for Sheltering Aliens

By Laurie Becklund Los Angeles Times Service

UCSON, Arizona — On Oct. 1, 1984, Salomon Graham, federal informant and veteran smuggler of illegal aliens, strapped a recording device to his chest and drove to meet a group of suspected smugglers of illegal aliens under investigation by the U.S. migration and Naturalization Service.

"This is C-192," or confidential informant 92, Mr. Graham said into the hidden microphone as he drove into a parking lot. "I am at the Camel-back Presbyterian Church."

He walked inside the church. The next thing he heard, according to a transcript of his tape, was "everybody reciting a prayer," and then a Salvadoran man describing to the congregation the violence he said had forced his family to flee their native country.

Mr. Graham's recording may have been the first time that the U.S. government has bugged an open church service. "To my knowledge, the U.S. government never had to before," said Don Reno, special assistant U.S. attorney, in an interview. "But this group was conspiring to smuggle illegal aliens into the United States, and they were using the national media to publicly recruit more co-

Thus, the federal government secretly investigated what was probably the most public alien-smuggling ring in U.S. history; the so-called sanctuary movement that has openly professed to sheltering about 2,000 illegal aliens.

The investigation ended last January when a federal grand jury indicated 16 members of the church-based movement on felony conspiracy charges, including 71 counts of smuggling, harboring and transporting illegal aliens.

Three defendants later pleaded guilty to lesser charges. Charges against two others have been dropped.

The trial of the remaining 11 - an econ cal mix that includes two Roman Catholic priests, a Presbyterian minister, two Quakers, two Methodists, a Unitarian, two Catholic lay workers and a Catholic nun — started this month after a summer of pretrial motions. It is expected to last into January.

The trial pits the federal government against a growing movement endorsed by nearly 300 churches and synagognes, 10 universities, and half a dozen city councils that contend they have a moral duty, even a legal right, to help people who claim they are flexing for their lives. "The most fundamental issue," Mr. Reno said, "is whether persons in disagreement with their government can take the law into their own hands and interpret that law in a way which is in clear violation of its purpose."

15, Mr. Reno was careful to keep religion out of the courtmonn, even to the extent of referring to border to work in their fields. Sister Darlene Nicgorski, a Phoenix nun, as Miss Nicgorski. He then described in detail how tion draw on investigators' files from the day the defendants had carried out a "criminal enter-prise" by guiding aliens through a hole in the border fence, or by giving them American school uniforms or fraudulent documents to

The second informant, Jesus Cruz, was described by sanctuary volunteers as a genial fel-low in his late 50s who had been an "uncle" to Latin American children he had helped trans-port in his undercover role as volunteer. Mr. Cruz even volunteered to send Christmas cards to children as part of a ruse to secure their addresses for subsequent arrest, sanctuary workers said.

"God bless you, father,' he would say to me, and give me a hug," said Tony Clark, a defen-dant who is an associate priest at Sacred Heart

The agent described the event as the beginning of a ploy to demonstrate to the public that the U.S. government, via "jack-booted Gestapo Border Patrol agents, [thinks] nothing of breaking down the doors of their churches to drag Jesus Christ out to be tortured and murdered."

An immigration service intelligence agent in Yuma noted in 1983 that a story about the movement appeared in a Catholic-Episcopal magazine with what he described as a "left-wing format of stories about nuclear disarmament U.S. foreign policy [and] black and poor peoples' movements.

In September 1984, an immigration agent based in Los Angeles attended two sanctuary events there, including one on Sept. 30 in which the Reverend Jesse L. Jackson, who had sought the Democratic presidential nomination, supported the movement and "expressed the usual anti-Reagan sentiment," the agent said.

ENYING that the case had been prosecuted for political reasons, Mr. Reno said that "everyone knew this would be a controversial case because priests and nums were being indicted." He added, "They singled themselves out for prosecution."

Since 1982, leaders of the movement have welcomed interviews by reporters and allowed television cameras to follow them occasionally as they transported refugees across the country.

They have distributed thousands of brochures, conducted public caravans of aliens through downtown streets and established a toll-free telephone number to widen their net-work. Mr. Fife even posted a biliboard-sized sign in front of his church announcing in Spanish that the church was a "sanctuary for the oppressed of Central America."

But such activities did not constitute the sort of evidence that he needed for trial, Mr. Reno said. "It was necessary to make the recordings to corroborate informants' reports," he said. The informants will testify at the trial, but the tapes will not be introduced because they are unnecessary and "difficult to work with," Mr. Reno

Defense attorneys said they suspected that Mr. Reno would not introduce the tapes because they could reveal the defendants' motiva-

No Fixed Rules on Terror

It does no good to fault Egypt or Malta or Greece for the death of 60 passengers in the storming of EgyptAir Flight 648. The responsively of the control of sibility for the carnage falls squarely on the terrorists. But to recognize that brings us no closer to understanding the mystery behind this chilling episode: Why did they do it?

Once in Malta, they made no specific demands except for fuel. Then they began killing, first passengers one at a time and then, unimaginably vicious, heaving grenades when commandos stormed the plane. In these circumstances, there can be no argument about the need for the Egyptian rescue operation, only about its management.

The presumed motive of the terrorists was to humiliate President Mubarak of Egypt and Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, for pledging to renounce violence outside Israel. There is talk of the terrorists' links to Libva's Colonel Qadhafi.

What can be said in the wake of this butchery is that airport security is still insufficient and that all civilized nations, not just Egypt, need more effective countermeasures against port. It may well be that the weapons were already hidden on the aircraft, which came from Cairo. The obvious need is to check the planes before passengers board them. There is a natural tendency at times of such cruelty to seek comfort in generalizations. Never negotiate, some say, forgetting that even Israel has in some circumstances found it wise to negotiate. Simplism plays into the hands of terrorism. All terrorist acts are unique, and few fixed rules can guide governments.

When in last resort governments use violence against terrorists, all need to improve their techniques to minimize casualties. Debating whether Egypt's commandos had to be called in is a matter of hindsight; evaluating their performance is preparation for the next time. Such operations should transcend concerns of national sovereignty. Foresight argues for a pooling of skills to provide the best help when terrorists strike with such hatred.

A lot of people at the Central Intelligence Agency have never been reconciled to the increased burden of accountability that Congress imposed on it in the mid-1970s. They see leaks and loss of effectiveness as the price of having to tell legislators about covert action, and they do not like being open to a new and, to them, suspect host of kibitzers. Liberating the CIA from such procedures stood high among the security goals proclaimed by Ron-ald Reagan in 1980. He has since, wisely, found more pressing tasks, but distaste for oversight lingers. It has been evident in recent outbursts by CIA Director William Casey.

The reformers had hoped that a nonpolitical intelligence professional would run the CIA someone like William Webster, the nonpartisan judge who took over the FBI, or Bobby Inman, for a while Mr. Casey's deputy. But President Reagan chose his campaign director. who has since made himself known, in part by public statements, as both an advocate and an operator of expanded CIA covert actions.

Several instances have come to light in which Mr. Casey had to be reminded of his statutory obligation to brief Congress in a full and timely fashion. Recently the CIA's competence was called into doubt in the fiasco of Vitaly Yurchenko's "defection." It was not simply that the agency rather publicly exulted in an intelligence coup that turned to dust. Central to the conservative indictment of the 1970s was the charge that human intelligence had been downgraded in favor of technical intelligence, the collection of information by spy satellites and the like. Here the conservatives' man blew the case of a live agent. The chairman of the Senate's Select Committee on Intelligence, Dave Durenberger, goes on to question the quality of the CIA's intelligence product. Outsiders cannot really tell whether analyses are sufficiently farsighted and free of political bias, but, although it ruffles Mr. Casey, there can be no harm in keeping the analysts on their toes. Before the current flap, Mr. Durenberger said that Mr. Casey had indicated support for a committee plan to check on the CIA's system of looking shead. Presumably that support still holds.

Does all this make a case for Mr. Durenberger's inclination to restrict the CIA director to an intelligence role? In the original 1947 National Security Act, intelligence was given a place behind, not at the policy table, performng a service function as a supplier of information. In this tradition, Mr. Durenberger sees intelligence as a "service organization" and advises the director to "welcome constructive comments designed to improve that service." The administration has another view.

This is an explosive issue, and it is unlikely to yield to the requisite consensus while disputes on oversight rage.

Why U.S. Must Distance Itself From Marcos A New Era

By Dave Durenberger

WASHINGTON — Time is run-ning out in the Philippines for the regime of President Ferdinand E. Marcos and for the United States.

A Communist-led insurgency has grown from a minor presence in the 1970s to more than 30,000 armed regular and irregular guerrillas. They control or are contesting control of at least 10 million people, or nearly 20 percent of the entire population. They are now active in nearly every province, including the outskirts of the capital. More important, their numbers have been growing rapidly, particularly in the last two years.

Like all insurgencies, this one is as much a political and social phenomenon as it is a military one. It feeds off the anger and despair of a population victimized by economic decline, political corruption, maldistribution of wealth and abuse of power. While Mr. Marcos, his wife and a few favored cronies and military commanders have amassed huge fortunes, the economy has become a shambles of mismanagement and corruption.

Politically, the Philippines is run by presidential decree with power concentrated in the small oligarchy around Mr. Marcos. The 1983 assassination of Mr. Marcos' strongest political opponent, Benigno S. Aquino Jr., almost certainly the work of Philippine military personnel, greatly accelerated the decline in popular support for the regime while stimulating recruitment for the insurgency. One result of deteriorating conditions has been a growing effort by Filipinos to leave for America; they soon will be the largest Asian minority there. It is an all-too-familiar problem. A corrupt, increasingly ineffective but pro-U.S. dictator faces a popular, adical revolution. Washington is faced with the dilemma of trying to prop up a disintegrating regime or abandoning it and accepting an anti-U.S. successor. The pattern has repeated itself, with local variations, in postwar China, Cuba, Vietnam, Iran and Nicaragua. In each case the United States waited too long and allowed itself to become too closely identified with the established regime. When the revolution triumphed, America was left without ties or credit with a new, often virulently hostile government — whether led by Mao Zedong, Fidel Castro, the Viet Cong, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini or the Sandinists. These have been a series of costly lessons: We cannot afford another.

No one can know for certain whether there is still time in the Philippines. Certainly the hour is late.

OS ANGELES - A few years ago, the president of one of the leading semiconductor companies in the United States complained to me about the unwillingness of the Japanese to open their markets to his

the room became uncomfortable.

But I believe that there is still time, and that it is clear what we must do. The U.S. administration has tried to use quiet pressure and argument to persuade Mr. Marcos of the seriousness of the situation and the necessity for reforms. The policy has not worked, because Mr. Marcos sees reforms as undermining his personal and political position.

It is time for the United States to distance itself publicly from the Marcos regime in the eyes of the Philippine populace. References to the "U.S.-Marcos dictatorship" have been a staple of propaganda by leftist groups for years. In recent weeks some important steps have been taken. In a highly visible mission, Senator Paul Laxalt, a Republican of Nevada, brought a personal letter from President Reagan urging reforms. The U.S. ambassador in Manila has condemned the government's response to the deaths of four Americans in that country at the hands of Philippine security forces. Senators and congressmen have spoken out in blunt terms con-

Mr. Marcos has responded to these, as well as domestic pressures by calling for early presidential elections - a kind of national referendum on his leadership which is due to be held early next year.

That may or may not be a welcome development. If Mr. Marcos uses the means available to him to rig the outcome, as his record indicates that he might, the result will be worse than no election at all. It will be the final death knell for democracy in the Philippines, and many of those who have pinned their hopes on democratic processes will give up and throw in their lot with the insurgents.

Nevertheless, the democratic opposition appears to believe that it has no choice but to pick up the gauntlet that Marcos has thrown down. Elections are the only hope.

It is up to the United States to do whatever it can to ensure that these elections are honest, whether Mr. Marcos intends them to be or not. The Senate and the House have passed resolutions that set forth the conditions that Congress considers essential for fair elections.

They include an insistence that Marcos observe the provision of his own Constitution requiring a presi-dent to resign before holding a special election; that the opposition be provided adequate access to radio, television and the print media during the campaign; that the election com-mission charged with overseeing the process be staffed with genuinely nonpartisan members; that official accreditation be extended to the National Movement for Free Elections, an independent citizens' electionmonitoring organization; that the military serve a nonpartisan, professional function as protectors of the balloting not instruments for rigging the outcome; and that Mr. Marcos nominate a vice presidential romaing

America Should Act to Equalize Trade Competition

The Japanese ven has risen in the foreign exchange markets to about 200 to the dollar. That's a dramatic increase since Sept. 22, when the five largest industrial democracies announced a campaign of intervention in the markets to bring the dollar down. The yen is now getting up close to the exchange rate that reflects its actual value in trade. The dollar was overvalued against the yen by roughly 30 percent when the intervention began two months ago. Now the overvaluation has been brought into the range of 5 to 10 percent.

Amidst the applause and congratulations. the governments of the trading countries now run two kinds of danger. On the American side there is a great temptation to say that intervention works and the exchange rates can safely be left to intervention alone. That is a very comfortable idea, for it means that there is no need to take up difficult and unpleasant responsibilities such as reducing the size of the federal budget deficit. But, like many comfortable ideas, it is wrong. Intervention only means using government money to buy and sell currencies and move rates by changing supply and demand in the market. Historically, intervention ruled the exchange markets only as long as govern-ments' resources were massively larger than those of private traders and speculators. But the former system of fixed exchange rates collapsed in the early 1970s precisely because of the growth of currency and investment flows beyond levels that governments could outweigh. Trading in the dollar alone now is in the range of $200 billion a day; total U.S. government revenues are a little under $800 billion a year. If the major trading countries want stable rates, they are going to have to bring their basic economic policies into better harmony. For the Americans, that begins with getting the budget deficits under control.

exchange rates swing, and this one mainly threatens the Japanese and the Europeans. As the American dollar drops, U.S. demand for Japanese and European imports is going to drop with it. Japan and particularly West Germany, which sets the pace for Europe, are reacting very slowly to this reality. The right response is to step up domestic demand.

But there is another danger ahead as the

There is a balance to be drawn between asser-

that inflation was now here and that the public

Mr. Douglas insisted that in its inflation the

He found four parallels between the old order the industry. What is happening in semiconductors may foreshadow what is in store for America itself. These are the facts. The Japanese have virtually routed U.S. semiconductor companies from the largest segment of the memory chip market and stand poised to capture other sectors of the industry still dominated by American concerns. Despite a deep recession in the industry, Jacontent of the government's promotional > panies for the first time. The goal of the Japanese is to position themselves to control the market of the future. The Japanese are doing well in semiconductors because they have committed themselves to a national strategy. In pursuing this, the government creates a selectively closed home market from which Japanese companies launch export forays to the rest of the world. Huge sums of cheap capital, made available by the national emphasis on savings, and the ability to accept low rates of return on investment, enable compa-nies to drive down prices while expan's semiconductor investment is soaring, exceeding that of U.S. com-panding capacity and maintaining high levels of research. I mention the semiconductor industry in some detail, not only because semiconductors provide the brains for the devices that are transforming the world economy, or even because the programmable intelligence they make possible are at the heart of economic leadership and military strength, but also because the problems of the semiconductor industry illustrate the U.S. dilemma This is no smokestack industry. Its level of capital spending, research and development, productivity, commitment to long-term investment and a skilled management and work force are the envy of the world. Yet U.S. companies in this field are losing.

If the United States cannot compete in industries where we are the most productive, our standard of living will deteriorate. But while nobody wants that, there is not yet the political will to take decisive action. The President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness is ignored. The debate on tax reform barely mentions the words "trade" or "competitiveness." And efforts to reduce the budget deficit, which in turn would bring down interest rates, lower the dollar and make U.S. exports more attractive, are going nowhere.

out legislating additional taxes. In-stead of biting budget and tax bullets, the president and his adversaries are gumming rhetorical marshmallows. One doesn't have to hark back to Benjamin's Franklin's sense of thrift to know that Americans have been creating an economy where the sound order of things is perpenually compromised. Assuming that governcan fix any have lurched from one indulgence to another, embracing the promiscuous creation of credit. But for how long? We are but 5 percent of the world, and oceans no longer insulate us from other nations determined to master the techniques of economic strength: strategy, savings, sacrifice.

To compete and win requires a fundamental change of mind. The indispensable first step is to make competition in international markets a national goal, and redesign U.S. tax, spending and trade-policies to overcome the nation's handicaps.

President Reagan should use the legal and political levers at his comblock the onslaught of foreign prodwelfare. Markets once lost will be much harder to regain, and he must understand this as he weighs his moves. In cases where trade deficitswith certain countries remain abnormally large, it may even be necessary to negotiate an agreed balance. As for the United States' semiconductor industry, the options are few.

The companies could form strategic alliances with European and Assau companies. Indeed, joint ventures even among American competitors may be necessary to maintain U.S. sooner rather than later, the U.S. government must intervene.

Hazards Facing the Environmentalists

WASHINGTON - None of us environmentalists has seen a handy list of reasons for not protecting the environment. But if one did exist for opponents of environmental protection, it would probably look something like this:

• We need more study. This is the all-time granddaddy of reasons for an-time grandial of reasons for not taking action now. The acid-rain argument is just its latest incar-nation. Warning: Do not be drawn into a discussion of what should be done about the problem in the meantime. The idea is that nothing should be done but if you say so, someone might think of something.

It would hart the economy. The polls keep showing public support for environmental issues, yet envi-ronment-bashing has consistently been part of President Reagan's popular appeal, because of the strong impression that environmental protection and economic growth are at opposite ends of a seesaw. Raise one and you automatically lower the other.

Warning: The seesaw relationship is not necessarily true so avoid calling for more study on this one. Remember what happened when the Environmental Protection Agency called for more study of cutting down on lead in gasoline and found economic benefits.

It would cost jobs. Don't hesitate to use this argument even when the environmental action you're trying to stop would create more jobs than it would eliminate. Back when the late Representative Phil Burton, Democrat of California, was trying to buy up forest to ex-pand Redwood National Park timber companies were successful with the jobs issue, even though there were a lot more new rangers than laid-off lumberjacks. Note: Keeping the issue general, rather than focusing on the jobs of specific workers, also avoids embarrassment when the environmental action would benefit those same workers (for example, pesticide restrictions and farm workers).

The risk is exaggerated. Lots of environmental issues involve small risks of a big disaster, like people getting cancer or a dam breaking or a nuclear plant melting down. Until it happens, which it probably By David Roe won't, you can always argue that the other side is being alarmist.

Note: This arguments works par-ticularly well with toxic chemicals. where the evidence comes in funny numbers that the public doesn't understand, and where the toxicologists can't keep up with the de-mands for analysis. Throw the word . "chemophobia" around: It implies that concerns about chemicals are both exaggerated and irrational • The damage is trivial. The flip side of "exaggerated risk," this is usually referred to as the Snail Darter theme, after its most famous incamation in the case of the Tennessee Valley Authority's Tellico Dam. The builder argued in the 1970s: "What's a three-inch fish, compared to a giant dam?"

In fact, fish seem to make a natural target for this argument. Dave Stockman's Office of Management and Budget came up with a winner when it announced that the cost of cleaning up said rain would amount to $6,000 a fish — a brilliant combining of the Snail Darler theme with "horting the economy."

• You can't keep "changing the rules. This is a simple appeal to fairness. The nuclear industry has used it most, but it turns up in every context where environmental and health protection are delegated to technical regulations. The boreaucrats who wrote the rules are hardly eager to start over.

Trust us to handle it ourselves. In a nutshell, deregulation. The regulators are against you on this one, since if the system trusted you instead of them on technical issues, > even the toughest regulatory pro-grams have to trust the industry for something - and that most of the time they're trusting you across the board because they can't keep up.

> Do not be intimidated when something goes wrong. After the Bhopal catastrophe in India, and even after a toxic gas release or two in Institute, West Virginia. Union Carbide was still being translated. Carbide was still being trusted to prevent future leaks at its plants they'd be out of a job. But they since no one else knew how, and no one had the neeve to shut them. • We can't afford to accept liability. You simply can't stay in business if you "accept" such a burden. The nuclear industry led the way on this argument with the Price-Anderson Act, which protected them from liability above $560 million (very useful at Three Mile Island)

• If you've seen one tree, you've seen 'em all. Don't be fooled. There's a brilliant argument lurking behind this discredited old one-liner. The modern version is powerful. The point of the old version was that trees shouldn't be saved for their own sake, but used The modern version has to do with pollution loading and the point is the same. One of the great resource values of the air, water, and land is their ability to soak up pollution to a certain level without causing much harm. That value is there to be used Anyone who thinks otherwise is being a purist, or tree hugger bying to protect nature for its own sake.

PARIS - My ulterior motive in going to summits is to meet Soviet counterparts where they are free to talk and have been told to be comminmicative. Jousting is encouraged. At such a time, summit groupies ask: Are these Communists for real? Are they telling us what they sincerely, though mistakenly, believe, or are they spouting a line that they, as intelligent people, know to be false?

In the same way, President Reagan must wonder whether the views of General Secretary Gorbachev during their six hours of title-a-title reflected the Soviet leader's grasp of scality or were merely official positions set forth to justify Marxism.

If the president concludes that his

Soviet counterpart can be persuaded by reason and by personal assurance to modify a cold war paranoid mindset, then Mr. Reagan would think it possible to allay Soviet fears of America, thereby opening the way to arms reduction. Such a conclusion presupposes that mistrust, and not desire for world domination, motvates the Soviet leaders.

Central to that fond hope is this notion: Behind the facade of truth-twisting and disinformation is a man in touch with reality as we know it, whose political conclusions may dif-fer but whose historical premises are in the ballpark of our world.

I explored that in a four-hour subsummet dinner with Comrade Tough-guy and Comrade Niceguy.

Our foodiff conference was civilized and thought-provoking. Perhaps Fant thining naive in the sentiment of the moment, but I have come to this conclusion. They really believe all that sing — just as fiercely as I believe what I know to be the truth.

On the heavy matters - on values the freedom and sustice and ethics we do not get enough traction on manually accepted facts even to con-flict profitably. I think they suffer not

I conclude that my logic and persuasiveness are not going to change their world view one tota.

Perhaps the same thought has occurred to Mr. Reagan after his per-sonal encounter with Mr. Gorbachev, who is Comrade Toughguy and Courade Nicegny rolled into one.
What if Mr. Reagan concludes, as have, that his counterpart really believes in his heart of hearts most of what he says, and is not just putting up a rhetorical Potentin village? In that case, misguided mistrust of the West is not the basic problem and communication is not the cure.

Dialogue can lessen hostility and is necessary to avert miscalculation, but at the core of superpower conflict is something other than misgoided mis-trust. It is their certitude that their historical mission is to extend their system's dominance to the corners of the Earth — countered by America's responsibility to muture freedom evcrywhere. Mutual understanding will widen, not narrow, that gulf.

You can talk to them. You can like many of them as individuals. But tryanny does not become tolerable. because a tyrant or his agents sincerely think it is right. It just becomes more dangerous. Summit meetings should teach us that communication is not all, especially when it reveals the depth of our differences.
"Our goals are the same," gushes the president. Not so. We can hope the president. Not so. We can now that both sides' means are peaceful. but we are certain that both sides ends are antithetical Let us, on all levels of summits, chink our glasses to a candid new era of mutual mistrust, because that will mean that we profoundly understand each other's ultimate aims. The New York Times.

The Dynamism of Bombay

West. To see the city in the two days most visitors allow, you need a guide with the knowledge, enthusiasm and stamina of Homai (pronounced, she insists, "Oh, my") Mehta, the doyenne of Bombay's travel

With Homai you discover that, despite the growth of bay shows skyscrapers bristling like a mini-Manhattan; at night the long curve of the harbor outshines Nice in a display of light that has justly earned the title "the queen's necklace." Only a couple of blocks away are the Dhobi Ghats, an entire area given over to the job of washing Bombay's clothes. Homai Mehra confides, "You don't hire your dhobi. You inherit him. Mine comes regulareach Monday. Sometimes I give him as many as 50 items. He never marks them . . . and never makes any misrakes. Everything comes back spotless, with my husband's shires starched and ironed. How he does it, I don't know."

Bombay's rise to modern fame and fortune began with the Portuguese. Vasco da Gama was in the area in 1498, and early in the 16th century the Sultan of Gujarat ceded the bay of Born Bahia to Portugal. The British acquired Bombay through Charles Il's marriage to a Portuguese princess, Cath crine of Braganza. It was part of her dowry.

Despite congestion and chronic overcrowding, Bombay today boasts parks, a cricket stadium, beaches, an aquanum, libraries and museums.

There are some fascinating sights in the old Crawford Market. All around is a cacophony of cries and calls, shouts, grunts and bursts of laughter.

There is also the Chor Bazaar, or Thieves Market, where according to a local anecdote you can be sold spare parts from your own car. Here Gucci and Dior fakes are passed off as the real thing. Nearby, each day hundreds of customers can be seen choosing jewelry from proffered trays, much as they would select hors d'oeuvres at a cocktail party. The jewelry is mostly chunky, sometimes ostentatious, but always pure Everywhere in Bombay you find industrious Sikhs, religious Jains, orthodox Jews, hard-working Hindus and Arabs giving tips to hotel staff and beggars that are more than many of them normally earn in a month. There are also Parsis. In Bornbay their influence has been out of all proportion to their numbers. Some insist the Parsis have made Bombay what it is. Three of their many famous names stand our; Tara, whose empire includes hotels, steel mills, trucks and chemicals; Wadia, owner of textile mills; and Godrej, maker of typewriters and electrical equipment. Their philanthropy has built hospitals, schools, rest homes, museums and the Tata Institute of Fundamental Research.

One of the most important buildings in Bombay is at 19 Laburnum Road. This is the house where Gandhi lived. It is now a museum with 28 superbly produced dioramas depicting in great detail highlights from the Mahatma's life. The room where the founder of modern India lived has been preserved, including his spinning wheel.

One excursion every visitor makes while in Bombay is to the Elephanta Island. Approaching the small green island after an hour's boat ride, the traveler has little idea what to expect. All is quickly revealed at the end of a climb up a hundred gently sloping steps.

The massive cave carvings at Elephanta are among the unsung wonders of the world. Each 25-foor-high (7.5-meter) frieze is a faneasy of intricate figurative detail which, despite being nearly 1,500 years old and having been used by Portu-guese troops as eargets for rifle practice, remain bewilderingly

Inside this cave temple is art of the highest quality, which deserves to rank with the finest carvings and sculprures in Greece or Egypt. Bombay, like India, is full of surprises.

The Delights of Delhi

double delight. It is two cities in one. The first presents itself as you drive in from the airport: a forest of green interspersed with the homes of industrialists, the enclaves of embassies, and nine or 10 modern hotels. The second is a sea of people constantly being jostled and harried, yet never quite losing their inherent cheerfulness.

New Delhi remains distinctly British. Old Delhi could only be in India. In the former the old imperiousness remains; in the latter the feel of 5,000 years of turbulent history is everywhere in the narrow, overcrowded streets and alleyways.

It was in 1911 that the British laid the foundations of New Delhi to glorify the empire. This imperial complex, designed largely by Sir Edwin Lutyens, became the headquarters of the British Raj in Asia. It is now the capital of the new Republic of India.

Parliament House, a vast circular building rimmed by an

The best shopping is around Connaught Place, but do not expect Bond Street, Fifth Avenue or the Viz Condotti. India is not part of the West, but a gareway to Asia. The shops in Connaught Place are not department stores, but small famly-owned businesses selling everything from expensive jewelry to cheap souvenirs. Minutes away, you are cransported back to the Mogul magnificence of the Jama Masjid, India's largest mosque, weicoming you to Old Delhi. Its cloistered courtyard can hold as many as 20,000 of the faithful when they come to pray.

But most visitors are first taken to the Qurb Minar, a 234 foot (70-meter) 13th-century minarer which is a unique and pear-perfers example of tower architecture. Its builder must have been a mathematical genius; it has stood for eight centuries. Its sides are alive with intricately carved quotations from the Koran which get larger as the tower grows higher, so that from the ground it is as casy to read the words at the top as those at the bottom.

Close to the minarer is another of Delhi's curiosities. This is the famous iron pillar that stands in what was once the countyard of a mosque. It has been there since the fifth century. What makes it an object of interest is that throughout 1,300 years it has remained rust-free . . . and nobody knows how or why:

Humayun's tomb is another must for every invelor to Delhi. Built in the 16th century, it marks the beginning of a great period in Mogul architecture which culminated in the glorious Taj Mahal. Both are memorials to love. The tomb in Delhi was built by a wife for her emperor bushand; the one at Agra is a busband's everlasting mibute to his wife.

Before leaving Delhi most visitors make a pilgrimage to the black-marble simplicity of Gandhi's somb. It is a place of manquil beauty.

Now, sadly, there is another shrine to be visited. The house where Prime Minister Indica Gandhi lived, worked and was assassingsof has been named into a place of remembrance. Here people come in the hundieds to pay their respects.

Nobody can think of this scene as a delight. Yet it is part of the never-ending story of Della and India, a tale equally divided between rurbulence and haunting beauty.

Goa Offers Beaches and a Touch of Europe

Sitting beneath a swaying palm with nothing to disturb the stillness except the sound of the Arabian Sea lapping the sand is an experience in tranquility. Today there are not many resorts where you can be by yourself, alone with tropical nature. Goa is one of them.

The atmosphere—distinct yet indefinable-makes Goa a place apart. It is Europe in the tropics. The influence of the Portuguese, who ruled here for more than 450 years, is everywhere. Nearly 40 percent of the sary, built in 1543, is one of the more visitors will visit Goa population is Christian.

When the Portuguese conquered the area it quickly earned for itself the name Goa Duorada—Golden Goa. But the Europeans had not arrived solely for trade. They were defaith. When persuasion failed they issued decrees that made it virtually impossible for a Hindu to practice his religion even in the privacy of his own home. They built churches and destroyed temples. And in 1560 the Inquisition arrived. Many families fled the terror. Trade languished and Portugal's power in Europe began to weaken. By the 18th century much of the glory of Goa had faded.

Yet a touch of Europe remains in the churches and in the piazzas where the grandees of old rook their evening prom-

Traveling Like a Maharajah

Many dispute what constituted Britain's greatest contribution to India. Some say the English language, others the art of administration. Still more believe it was the railways, which stretch to the remotest parts of the country and provide Indian Railways with the largest system in Asia.

There are nearly 40,000 miles (64,000 kilometers) of broad-, meter- and narrow-gauge track. Daily, more than 8 million people travel on nearly 10,000 trains connecting 7,085 stations scattered throughout the sprawling subcontinent.

Anyone who has traveled by train in India has his own tale to tell of compartments packed with people all managing to smile and give the impression of some kind of comfort even of men and women sleeping contentedly, to the envy of their fellow travelers, on luggage racks. But tourists are unlikely to suffer any of these experiences. For them the India Tourist Development Corporation has some pleasant surprises.

Flying High Above Asia and the World

Air-India is one of the world's scheduled for the India/Africa most successful airlines. Not only is its in-flight service by sari-clad hostesses calm and courteous, but its latest annual report discloses that during 1983/1984 passenger traffic rose 7.9 percent and freight jumped 18.4 percent. The passenger load between India and the United States increased from 70 percent to 73.8 percent and traffic with Japan was up by 5 percent, while the number of passengers carried on the Singapore route soared 45 percent. During the year, revenue rose 10.1 percent.

These are impressive figures. Seeking to take advantage of the increased interest in India generated by films like "Gandhi" and "A Passage to India," a four-passenger group fare from the United States and Canada was established as an attractive package. The airline is to acquire six Airbus A310-300 aircraft next year as part of a fleet-replaceand India/Gulf routes, and later will be used for runs to Australia and Japan.

As part of a realistic approach to accommodating the business traveler, Air-India has reduced the total carrying capacity of its Boeing 747s from 394 to 377 but increased the number of Business Class seats from 20 to 40. Another way of increasing capacity has been the introduction of the Airbus on flights to Singapore.

On all long-distance routes passengers are pampered with excellent food and above-average service, and in Business and First Class they enjoy good French wines and champagne. Business fliers also get a traveling pack including a sleeping mask, slippers, a headset for music or the sound track of a film and toiletries for freshening up before landing. With Delhi now less than nine hours away from London,

It has since been followed by a second hotel at the Delhi Airport with 416 rooms and a third at Srinagar, overlooking Lake Dal, which has 254 rooms and one of the finest conference complexes in India.

Air-India has come a long way since 1932, when it began operating with a single Puss Moth aircraft. Today its planes are named after Indian rivers, emperors and Himalayan peaks. The entire network totals more than 35,000 miles (55,500 kilometers).

While Air-India rules the international airways, inside the Indian subcontinent most of the air traffic is handled by Indian Airlines. Their network

One of the best deals in the air is Indian Airlines' $375 "Discover India" fare. This ticket allows you to fly anywhere inside the country for 21 days, but does not allow the flier to backtrack to any city except to make a connection.

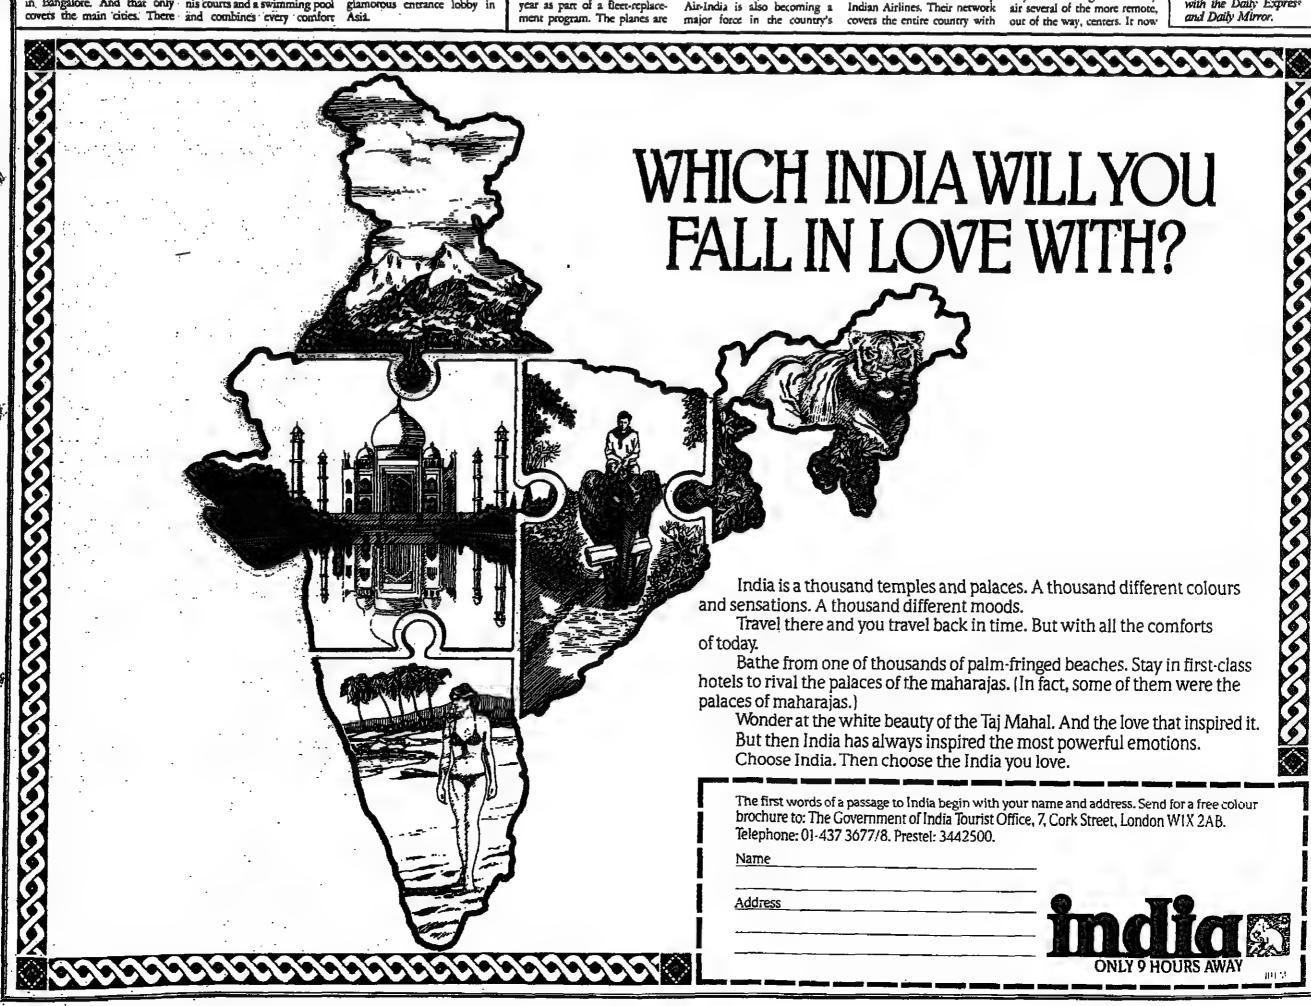

Because Indians love to fly. and also because of the growth in tourism, Indian Airlines are now using international planes, including Airbuses, rather than the smaller 100-plus scatters that were adequate until a couple of VCATS ago.

Since 1981 a third airline has taken to the skies above India. Vayudoot has begun to link by air several of the more remote, stations in 13 states and two union territories. No fewer

During the first year of its operation the airline carried 19,000 passengers. By 1984-85 this had increased to 160,000 and is expected to top the 350,000 mark this year. Profits have grown at an annual rate of more than 60 percent, and in 1985 should increase by 100 percent, making Vayudoot one of the best managed airlines in the world. Its market is the lower-middle income group Some of its package tours cost as little as £40 ($56) including air travel, sightseeing and goodclass accommodation. The duration of the tours is between

Vampirologist Nibbles on New Angle for Her Tales of Horror

By Steve Brewer

SAN FRANCISCO - The problem with most books about vampires, says Anne Rice, is they have the wrong outlook. "Everything I had ever seen focused on the victim, not the vampire, and he was the interesting one," said the author whose latest book is "The Vampire Lestat" (Alfred A. Knopf,

"I had never read a vampire book or seen a vampire movie that satisfied me," she said. "The surface hadn't been scratched."

"The Vampire Lestat" and her 1976 best seller "Interview With the Vampire," Rice lets the reader look through the vampire's glowing eyes at a world populated with tasty humans and his fellow creatures of the night. The tales explore the personalities of vam-

"I wanted to write a new mythology," Rice said, "Bram Stoker wrote his own when he wrote 'Dracula." He researched the old legends in Eastern Europe and then chose what portions of that he would use in his book. I did the same thing,

In her books, Rice said, she tries to envision an immortal mind. In other works, the concept of immortals "is really boring," she said. "They're usually looking for a lost love. I think that if these creatures really could live forever, or even for a couple of centuries, they would have to have something on their minds other than a lost love."

For Rice's vampires, the search pires, depicting them as immortals is for a meaning to existence. "If a with a good deal of mortal emotion person was immortal, then sooner

REPUBLIC OF CHILE CANUTILLAR PROJECT

INVITATION TO INTERNATIONAL PREQUALIFICATION OF PARTICIPANTS CONTRACT CC-51

SUPPLY AND ERECTION OF ELECTROMECHANIC EQUIPMENT FOR THE CANUTILLAR POWER PLANT.

ENDESA invites Chilean and foreign manufacturers and suppliers of electromechanic equipment produced in member countries of the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), as well as to firms specialized in engineering services and erection of electromechanic equipment from those same countries, to submit application to participate in the prequalification of participants for the Contract CC-51. Supply and Erection of Electromechanic Equipment for the Canutillar Power Plant, Canutillar Project.

MAIN CHARACTERISTICS OF THE PROJECT

The Conutillor Power Plant will be located some 1,000 km south of Santiago, Chile, near Puerto Montt city and the works will be developed between the Chapo lake and the Relancavi estuary.

The power plant will use the 240 m difference of elevation between the Chapo lake and the sea and a 60 cubic meters per second mean annual flow, corresponding to the Chamiza river plus the diversion of the Blanco, Pangol and Lenca rivers flows.

These resources will allow the installation of a 130 MW power plant with an average annual production of 960 million kWh. The works of the Canutillar Power Plant will be executed through different contracts. The power plant commissioning is scheduled for the first

SCOPE OF CONTRACT

A summary of the major equipment to be supplied and erected under contract CC-51 is as follows:

A. EQUIPMENT SPECIALLY DESIGNED AND MANUFACTURED FOR ENDESA

- Two (2) spherical valves. Valve diameter 2.1 m, maximum service pressure 336 m water column, including operation and control and 38 m²/sec, including governors and accessories.

— Two (2) Francis turbines, 74 M.W. each, H = 213.5 m head, 375 r.p.m.

-Two (2) three-phase generators, 70 MVA each, 13.8 kV generating voltage, power factor 0.95, frequency 50 Hz, including static excitation, voltage regulation and accessories.

-Two (2) three-phase power transformers, 75 MVA each, 13.8/230 kV, FOW, YN d1 and accessories.

- So. (6) surge crresters to protect 245 kV equipment.
- One [1] 245 kV, SF6 gas insulated substation.

-Two (2) 15 kV generator circuit breakers. Segregated-phase bus.

- Electric control equipment Protection equipments and fault recorders.

CLOSING DATE

The information requested in the prequalification documents must be submitted at ENDESA's main office, no later than 11.30 c.m., January

REQUIREMENTS FOR PREQUALIFICATION

ENDESA will preselect firms or joint venture participants on the basis of their experience as well as technical and financial capacities, and at the same time, will qualify Chilean and foreign manufacturers, suppliers, engineering firms, erection of electromechanical equipment firms, whose nformation will be submitted by the participants.

Chilean and foreign firms may constitute an association or joint venture. Any association or joint venture not legally formed should exhibit a written commitment binding the prospective member to legally materialize said association in the case the contract be awarded to them.

OTHER CONTRACTS OF CANUTILLAR PROJECT The Canutillar Poject considers two (2) other main contracts, the Contract

CC-22: Construction of the intake surge shaft and penstocks with its prequalification procedure under way and the contract CC-23: Construction of steel lined tunnel, power house and discharge works with its prequalification procedure to be initiated in a near future.

FINANCING

The financing scheme that has been envisaged comprehends the following

- ENDESA's own funds;

—A loan requested to the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB)

—And loans fied to suppliers. Therefore, at the bid stage, prequalified participants will have to offer financing to cover at least eighty five per cent (85%) of the foreign currency portion of the contract value for the engineering services, equipment supply, shipping, erection and works of contract CC-51. The remaining value of this contract would be covered by funds from the loan has been requested to the IDB.

Bonuses, and Their Dangers, Record Are Taking Hold in Europe

whether executives percent in 1977. This figure still lags behind that of the United States, deserve them. where 95 percent of U.S. companies have such bonns plans.

Charles and In France, according to Towers, Perrin, Forster & Crosby Inc., the French branch of the U.S. remuneration consultants, 65 percent of all French managers get some kind of executive bonus linked to performance.

Despite their increasing use of them, companies are finding that executive cash bonness alone are not likely to change ingrained practices. In addition, as the bonness grow, sometimes to more than 50 percent of base salary, unions and shareholders wonder whether the executives deserve them.

"Executive bonness are highly overrated," said Tom Peters, it's management trum and co-swiper of the best calling book "In U.S. management guru and co-author of the best-selling book "In Search of Excellence," which analyzed 10 top U.S. performers.

"Executive bonnses didn't appear as a major part of what good companies did," Mr. Peters said. "In a company that is in reasonably good shape, it isn't a great motivator. In companies that are hopeless bureaucracies, you need something to wake them up.

"But it is no panacea," Mr. Peters continued. "Putting a performance bonus on is not going to compensate for a hopeless bureaucracy. Top executives will just start running around with their heads cut off in ever-decreasing circles." THE PROPERTY OF

'N addition, some European executives, especially in large companies, who are accustomed to a relatively risk-free job may lose motivation once the bonus starts shrinking.

"The trouble in Britain is that many of the bonus schemes were introduced at the bottom of the cycle," said Tony Vernon-Harcourt, a remuneration adviser with Monks Partnership and author of "Top Management Remuneration 1985-1986," a survey that draws on annual reports of 1,200 companies and on salary and benefit surveys of 3,000 posts in 400 companies.

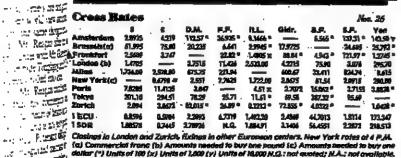

"There have been three good years of increasing profits, but what will happen when there is a downtum in profits?" Mr. Vernon-Harcourt said. "It could be an awful demonvator. Executives start living on their bonus, get used to the skiing holiday and the extra car for the wife,"

Average bonnses in Europe are still relatively low compared to those in the United States, but the number of companies paying as much as 60 percent of base salary, or offering open-ended bonus plans, is increasing.

PA has estimated the average bonus to be 20 percent in Italy and 9 to 13 percent in Britain. This compares with a U.S. average (Continued on Page 15, Col. 1)

Bayer Sees '85 Profits

Boom Is Cited In Foreign Sales

LEVERKUSEN, West Germany -- Bayer AG, one of West Germany's three biggest chemicals companies, expects record profits in 1985 for the second consecutive vear because of a continued boom worldwide sales, its chairman, Hermann Strenger, said Tuesday.

Speaking at a press conference Mr. Strenger also said that the 1985 dividend would at least equal 1984's payout of 9 Deutsche marks

($3.51), but gave no details.

Mr. Strenger said that sales had jumped nearly 10 percent to 35.5 billion DM in the first nine months of 1985, up 9.5 percent from the 32.43 billion DM in the 1984 period. He said they should rise to more than 46 billion DM by the end of the year, up from 43.03 billion in 1984.

Bayer's world-group pretax prof-rose to 2.51 billion DM in the first nine months of 1985, up 14.1 percent from the 2.20 billion DM of the 1984 period.

Parent-company volume in the first nine months rose 9.4 percent to 13.56 billion DM, with foreign volume up 11.2 percent and domestic volume up 5.9 percent.

In 1984, Bayer, whose products range from industrial chemicals to pharmaceuticals, reported record world-group pretax profit of 2.9 billion DM, an increase of 34.3 percent from 1983, on sales of 43 billion DM.

Along with its major West Ger-man rivals, Hoechst AG and BASF AG, Bayer continued to record increases in foreign sales, especially in North America, where volume rose 11.6 percent to 8.7 billion DM. North America is Bayer's second largest market after Europe, where volume rose 7.5 percent to 17.9 billion DM.

Mr. Strenger declined to be specific on dividend payments, al-though he said that Bayer had a policy of paying a "good" dividend when results were satisfactory, and of making adjustments when they

NEW YORK - Slack demand for military hardware cansed U.S. factory orders for durable goods to fall 2.1 per-cent in October, the third de-cline in the last four months and the biggest drop since July, the Commerce Department reported Tuesday.

It said that orders totaled $104.4 billion last month, a $2.2-billion decline from September. The drop followed a 0.9-percent decline in September and was the largest setback since a 2.3-percent fall in July. The weakness was attributed to another big drop in demand for military equipment. Mili-tary orders fell 26.6 percent last month after dropping 21.1 per-cent in September. But analysts cautioned that the defense category is volatile and future or-ders are likely to rise because of the Reagan administration's military buildup.

In other economic news, a University of Michigan survey found that 25 percent of all families expected economic improvement, down from 33 percent a year earlier and the all-time high of 52 percent in the second quarter of 1983.

Imported Steel As percentage of total supply in United States.

LTV Upholding Steel Commitment

By Thomas C. Haves

DALLAS - Aiready under pressure from cheap steel imports, LTV Corp. chose to double its bet on steel: In 1983, it agreed to acquire Republic Steel Corp., reasoning that by using the best operations from Republic and its own Jones & Langhlin steel unit, it could fashion a more efficient operation to compete with foreign rivals.

Its timing could not have been worse. The second-largest U.S. steelmaker, after United States Steel Corp., has slashed production costs. But steel imports have actually risen since it struck the agreement with Republic, and prices are lower, keeping LTV Steel mired in red ink.

Its losses over the last four years total $1.36 billion. And with analysts forecasting little change in steel demand through 1986, LTV has been pressed into selling some profitable assets and delaying some maturing debt in an effort to outlast its frustrating cash squeeze.

"Instead of moving into a growing market, or at least a stagnant market with a growing share, we entered the market at a time it was plunging," said Raymond A. Hay, LTV's chairman and chief executive. "Foreign steel has bombed the market."

Still, Mr. Hay called the acquisition of Republic "a good decision" and said he and LTV believe that the company could outlast its unrelenting cash problems and that their gamble would ultimately pay off.

"A lot of people like to think that we made a mistake" in buying Republic, Mr. Hay said. "But we have the potential to be a better steel company with Republic."

LTV actually considered getting out of the steel business when Republic approached it with a pur-chase offer in 1983, but elected instead to buy out Republic for $770 million in new stock. The agreement prompted a yearlong review before it was approved by the U.S. Justice Department, and it took effect in June 1984.

Until LTV's steel ambitions are realized, however, the burden of providing earnings falls on the company's non-steel operations. Its fast-growing serospace and defense unit is a major subcontrac-tor for the B-1 and Stealth bombers and has benefited from stepped-up Pentagon spending on President Ronald Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative. Last year the unit — which Charles A.

Texaco Chief Sees Difficulty In Raising Bond

DALLAS - Texaco Inc. may not be able to post the bond necessary to appeal a jury judgment that is nearly $2 billion more than the company's stock market value, Texaco's president was quoted as saying in a published report.

Nevertheless, the company believes the award may not withstand a pending judicial review, which would make the question moot, a statement released Tuesday said.

The statement came as Wall Street, in apparent reaction to the remarks by Texaco's president, Al-fred C. DeCrane Jr., went on a selling binge that forced a temporary suspension of trading in Texaco stock.

Last week, after a four-month trial, Houston jurors decided Tex-aco should pay Pennzoil Co. 2 re-cord $10.53 billion. They said that Texaco improperly enticed Getty Oil Co. to back out of a merger last year with Pennzoil. Texaco subsequently acquired Getty for $10.2

An appeal of that judgment could require Texaco to post a $12billion bond, a sum beyond the oil company's ability to pay, Mr. De-Crane was quoted as saying Mon-day by The Dallas Morning News. Texaco, which is based in White Plains, New York, and is the third largest U.S. oil company based on annual revenue, has a current stock market value of $8.6 billion.

Under state law, a defendant must post a bond equal to an award plus attorneys' fees and interest to appeal a judgment.
If a $12-billion bond is required

- Texaco doesn't have $12 billion and in my opinion, probably can't get it - then we'd have to look for some heroic measure, whether it's Chapter 11 or whatever," Mr. De-Crane was quoted as saying.
Under Chapter 11 of the U.S.

bankruptcy code, a company receives court protection from creditors while it works out a way to pay Mr. DeCrane's comment drew a heavy reaction on Wall Street. Trading in Texaco was halted on the New York Stock Exchange for 59 minutes in the morning because of an imbalance in buy and sell orders after falling $1.75 a share to $32.50 on heavy volume. Trading continued to be heavy and Texaco closed at $32.25, down $2.

Casseb Jr. of Houston has scheuled a hearing for Dec. 5 to listen to attorneys' arguments on whether he should affirm the jury's verdict and award.

BHP Acquires Monsanto Oil For $745 Million

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche MELBOURNE - Broken Hill Pty. took another step Tuesday toward becoming a major international oil concern with a $745-million purchase of Monsanto Oil Co. from Monsanto Co., the chemicals group based in Houston.

The agreement involves all Monsanto's oil and gas interests except those in Britain, which Monsanto Co. plans to sell off separately.

The purchase was the second by BHP of a U.S. oil company in the past year, following its takeover earlier this year of Energy Reserves Group Inc. for $504 million.

The acquisition of Monsanto Oil will give BHP additional North American reserves of nearly 74 million barrels of oil. and 730 billion cubic feet (20.9 billion cubic meters) of natural gas in the United States and Canada, BHP said.

Monsanto also has large exploration areas in both couniries, as well as properties that may be explored in Colombia.

Stock analysis hailed the move as another example of BHP's strategy of building up oil reserves, particularly in North America where they are cheap because of expectations of low oil prices.

BHP is Australia's largest crude oil producer, in partnership with Exxon Corp.

U.S. Banks Lend to Soviet for First Time in 5 Years

By Peter T. Kilborn

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — For reasons that analysts attribute partly to the spirit of the Reagan-Gorbachev talks but more to serious strains on the Soviet economy, U.S. banks have started lending to the Russians again after a five-year hiatus. Without the ceremony that often accompanies such transactions, four of the biggest U.S. banks, First National of Chicago, Morgan Guaranty, Bankers Trust and Irving Trust, plus a London subsidiary of Royal Bank of Canada, agreed early this month to lend the Soviet Union up to $400 million at unusually low interest rates to buy American and Canadian grain.

Eurasbank Plans Loss Provision Against Profit

FRANKFURT — European Asian Bank AG, the troubled Deutsche Bank AG subsidiary, is expected to make provision for possible loza losses against earaings this year without resort to loan guarantees from its owners, industry sources close to the Hamburgbased bank said Tuesday.

The need to set aside more than 400 million Deatsche marks ($160 million) in risk provisions for possi-ble bad debt from Far East customers forced Enrasbank earlier this year to allocate all of 1984 operating profit of 140 million DM to cover possible 1984 loan losses.

Eurasbank's owners, Demische Bank with 60 percent, Creditanstalt Bankverein of Austria, 22 per-cent, Amsterdam-Rotterdam Bank NV, 9 percent, and Société Génèrale de Banque of Belgium, 9 percent, had agreed in February to an estimated 300-million-DM guarantee, but the level of anticipated risk provision for 1985 loans is now expected to be down.

million Monday.

"This is the pause that refreshes," said Jon Groveman, head of equity trading at Laden-burg, Thalmann & Co. "As long as the bond market holds anywhere near current levels, it will be very difficult for stocks to engage in a significant sell-off."

"The path of least resistance is up," Mr. Groveman said. He said profit-taking has been limited because portfolio managers are worried that their performance has lagged the progress of the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index. Managers are holding their positions, hoping the market will go even higher. Mr. Groveman said. "The market has seen some minor profit-taking but mostly things just slowed a bit," said Alfred Harris of Josephthal & Co. in St. Louis. He called the slowing "normal and natural" for a market that has seen good moves up.

WASHINGTON — The U.S. International Trade Commission ruled Tuesday that American businesses had been hurt by mobile telephones from Japan sold in the United States at less than their "fair value," and ordered antidumping duties.

Paula Stern, who chairs the commission, said that imports from Japan had captured three-quarters of the growing U.S. market for such telephones, which are used chiefly in cars.

Because of the ruling the U.S. government will impose a special "dumping duty" on the Japanese phones. The duty will raise the price of the phones in the United States up to the price of comparable American mobile telephones.

The ruling was adopted by a 4-1 vote. The only dissenter was Susan Liebeler, vice chairman of the commission.

"Fair value" is generally considered to be the WIENNA - The director-general of Austria's largest industrial concern, Voest-Alpine AG, resigned Tuesday when it was disclosed that massive losses were expected for this year.

Heribert Apfalter, 60, has led the nationalized concern, which has more than 70,000 workers, for the past eight years. His resignation ollowed the difficult implements tion of a restructuring policy for the company, based in Linz. A report submitted this week to the holding company for national-ized enterprises, OEIAG, anticipages a deficit this year for Voest of 4.2 billion schillings ($232 million) following 6 billion schillings of acfollowing 6 billion schillings of ac-cumulated losses for Voest-Alpine since 1981. BRAVE NEW WORKPLACE

By Robert Howard. 224 pages. $16.95. Elizabeth Sifton Books, Viking, 40 West 23d Street, New York, N. Y. 10010.

Reviewed by Herbert Mitgang

A SPATE (or, rather, glut) of books has come out about management and corporate life whose common message seems to be how to overpower your rivals by gifle. Reading as if they were stamped out by the same MBA cookie-cutter, they offer advice about everything from the same werything from dressing for success to applying military tactics in the company board room and marketplace. Their canny, commercial authors suggest that the product is less important than the hustle or hustler behind it, that the customer no longer comes first. By contrast, there is some cold comfort in a book that raises questions about life in the corporate Utopias. Robert Howard, a scholar from Amberst and Cambridge who writes for several American opinion magazines, throws a monkey wrench into the winning-is-everything philosophy in "Brave New Workplace." Looking at several U.S. technological giants— among them AT&T, Eastern Airlines and Hewlett-Packard—he finds that their computerized operations cause human and, nlti-mately, corporate problems.

The author divides his book into three parts. In "The Computerization of Work," he tells how corporations use new technologies to expand managerial control at the expense of hard-won worker autonomy and efficiency. Looking at the underside of dehumanizing work mandated by managers, he maintains that the skills, attitudes and motivations of workers are crucial to work performance and corporate success.

In the next part — "The Re-enchantment of the Workplace" — the author finds that a divided work force's lower echelons consismainly of women or ethnic minorities. He deplores the severe health hazards caused by toxic substances that manufacturers ignore. In the final part — "The Social Control of Technology" — he points out that the workplace threatens to undermine such institutions as trade unions that have traditionally provided a counterweight to uncontrolled corporate power. Aware that unions have not caught up with new technologies, he calls on them to have a voice in redefining the values of the workplace. Howard believes the federal government ought to do something about all this. He sug-gests "new social legislation designed to institutionalize more effective mechanisms for social intervention in working life." His solutions are vague but noble. A pleasant tone of instice without outrage underlies "Brave New Work-place." To students of today's musical chairs in the executive suites, however, much of what Howard has to say will come as no surprise.

The literature of corporate life and manipulation goes back at least to the beginning of this century. Some of the same plaints and complaints turn up in "The Jungle," Upton Sin-clair's 1906 investigation of the Chicago stockyards, and in the writings by other mackrakers. The beat went on with Nelson Algren in "Chicago: City on the Make" and William Saroyan in his story "Aspirin Is a Member of the N.R.A." (the New Deal's National Recovery Act); both saw through the deadening pain caused by corporate manners and malfes

Changes in management at the top have occurred so rapidly (there does not scent to be much loyalty on the golden parachate least. that the author of "Brave New Workplace" has had to write a catch-up note for his talk of corporate behavior: "This is a book about change, and many of the people who appear in these pages have since moved on to other jobs. I have decided to retain the original mating. tional affiliations, even though some are now out of date. Needless to say, the comments of all represent personal opinions and not necesan represent personal opinions and had neces-sarily the official policies of the institutions where they work." That says something be-tween the lines: Fear in the boardroom can be as great as that in the blue and white-collar ranks of the workplace.

Shortstop Guillen Voted American's Top Rookie

the exuberant rookie who cost the Chicago White Sox a Cy Young winner but paid unexpected hitting and fielding dividends, was named the American League's rookie of the year on Monday.

"It can only happen to you one time in baseball," said Guillen, af-ter learning of the voting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

us with some solid defense. Guillen is the third Venezuelan after Chico Carrasquel and Luis Aparicio, to play shortstop for the White Sox and is the club's fifth rookie of the year winner. The others were Ron Kittle in 1983, Tommie Agee in 1966, Gary Peters in 1963 and Aparicio in 1956.

Guillen was a 308 hitter in four minor-league seasons, but he began the 1985 season slowly. He batted just 210 through June 10, but he hit 302 the rest of the way. He walked only 12 times and stole seven bases. struck out 36 times and scored 71 runs in 491 at-bats.

John McEnroe Meets the Press

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches MELBOURNE - With Tuesday's second day of play at the Australian Open washed out by rain, the spotlight fell upon John McEnroe, who filled it amply. The world's No. 2-ranked tennis player shoved a reporter over the back of a sofa and onto its cushion and spat at a photographer after they asked him if he planned to marry his actress girlfriend, Tatum O'Neal.

"I get the same question all around the world," McEnroe yelled as he pushed Geoff Easdown, a writer for The Melbourne Herald.

McEnroe then spat at News Limited photographer Mike Pot-ter, who spat back.

Easdown said he had asked McEnroe if he would have his photograph taken with O'Neal, "Then," Easdown reported, "he asked me to leave the hotel. I told him I wasn't going to be ordered around by him. "He then went off the deep end... He pushed me across the room, grabbed me by the throat and tore my shirt collar. But peo-ple started to gather, and he backed off." At a 45-minute news conference following the incident, McEnroe said: "The guy came to start something. I moved him to one side, and then suddenly I'm supposed to have assaulted him and he's physically beat up."

During the conference, McEnroe, giving polite and considered responses, denied having mar-ried O'Neal and that she was pregnant. That's not true," he said. "At the moment, nothing has been decided. At some point we are going to get married, but I honestly don't know when that will be."

He also said that he was unfairly treated by the media. "I have to deal with 10 times more amount of stuff than any other player," he said, adding that he had been particularly angered by reports he had married O'Neal. Why do I have to continue to deny it here?" McEnroe, 26, said that despite his anger he was "happier than I've ever been in my life. I appre-

The joke persisted this September as Liverpool, offering him a fresh start, began the new season ffetfully. Critics homed in on Molby's apparent immobility, his atypically heavy Scandinavian bulk of nearly 200 pounds (90.7 kilograms) pressed into a 6-foot-1 frame (1.85 meters).

Kenny Dalglish and Phil Neal, Liverpool's senior pros, knew Molby's ability from training, if not first-team experience. They told him that it took patience to blend into the machine. They urged what is almost the backroom Liverpool motto: Keep going keep trying Ouotable

OBSERVER The Baltimore Summit

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — Following is an excerpt from the best-selling memoir "First, but Never a Gentleman," to be published in the spring of 1998.

I had dreaded the summit conference ever since Jill Glossy, the White House photo-opportunity director, made the president order me to attend. The press ran vicious stories about my reluctance to go, but the worst came from Sam Donaldson, the grand old man of TV journalism.

Millions saw that snide show in which Sam used old film to argue that the First Gentleman was afraid there was "too much crêpe under his chin and too many moth holes in his wardrobe" to bear comparison with the Soviet boss's stunning wife, Grushenka Melodenko.

As First Gentleman I was used to being compared unfavorably. By the time of the Baltimore summit, remember, I had been compared with Nancy Reagan and pronounced "too paunchy," with Rosalynn Carter and pronounced "too dumb," with Betty Ford and pronounced "too vulgar," and with Pat Nixon and pronounced "too

This last referred to the time that the cameras caught me sleeping on the stage during Beulah's televised debate with President Bush. Or was it President Cuomo? I never pretended to be able to keep these people sorted out, and Beulah knew that I couldn't when she asked if I minded her running for

"Baby," I said, "you do anything you want to, and I'll be with you 1,000 percent, but don't expect me to keep those politicians sorted

Well, that particular summit was held in Baltimore. Everybody had got sick and tired of Geneva, especially the Russians, who said they were fed up eating those bread crumbs dipped in melted cheese. and couldn't everybody summit it up for a change someplace where the seafood was good? So it was Baltimore.

That's why I dreaded the summit. Now I have to confess. The campaign biography they published said I was from California where I'd been a fanatic surfer with eautiful sun-bleached hair when I was young. This was not true. It was written to help Beulah win the vote of the aging Californians who, of course, have been just about the only voters left in California ever since families went out of style out

The truth is, I come from Baltimore. Southwest Baltimore in a neighborhood which used to be called "Pigtown." There are still people who remember me there from the days we used to meet at the saloons while buying a bucket of beer for grandparents too stiff to get out of the house.

Speaking of a bucket of beer, that's exactly what I wished I had to dump on that cookie pusher Beulah calls a secretary of State when he said I'd have to invite Grushenka to tea in Druid Hill Park and then go to tea with her next day at Edgar Allan Poe's house, where the Soviet delegation was being put up.

That's when I really blew my stack. If my old Baltimore friends saw me serving tea, they'd never stop sneering.

What's worse was Grushenka being Russian, because a lot of my old friends were of Polish and Lithuanian extraction and didn't like Rus-Well everybody knows the up-shot. The papers at the time made it sound pretty sensational. I just want to get the real story on the record. I also want to answer the three questions everybody has asked me since that summit.

First of all, no, Grushenka did not like baseball, even after I told her that Russians said they invented the game. "Russians could never invent anything so dull as this contest between birds and socks," she said. "It is capitalist calumny."

Second, no. Grushenka did not refuse to accompany me into a Bal-timore club because the KGB told her a strip-tease dancer was performing inside. What they told her was that the price of beer was outrageous.

Finally, yes, Grushenka loved the crab cakes on the waterfront. So much better than that monotonous tea, you vulgar, paunchy, capitalist hedonist," she said. "Did you know crabs were invented in Rus-

Filmmaker Emir Kusturica: A Winner From Yugoslavia

By Henry Kamm New York Times Service

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia — Emir Kusturica concedes that it is not an altogether bad thing to have won the Palme d'Or, the top prize of the Cannes film festival, last May for directing "When Fa-ther Was Away on Business." It is making it easier to find backers for future films.

But in most ways, he says, the award has made him unhappy. It interferes with his normal life with family and friends in this Balkan backwater, where he was born 30 years ago and which he has no plans to leave. And it interferes with his real passion -- playing soccer.

"I'm not happy about it at all," said Kusturica. Uneasily, he shifted his muscular bulk about on a chair during an interview. "I feel the person who won the prize is not the same as me. He is another man, who walks behind me, while I remain the same - same last name, same first name."

Kusturica's euphemistically ti-tled film — father's business trip was a two-year term in a labor camp - is set just after 1948, when Yugoslavia broke with the Soviet Union. During a time of mass arrests of those suspected of Stalinism, many others were arbitrarily swallowed up by the camps. The father in the film, a minor state employee and wom-anizer, was one of them.

Kusturica depicts the corrosion of the life of a tightly knit, traditional Sarajevo family through the cruelly candid eyes of a 6year-old boy, played by Moreno de Bartolli, who misses nothing and retains his sanity and courage through mordant mockery and flights into sleepwalking. Kusturica had a great deal of trouble raising the money to make the film. After all, he said, it cost $200,000.

The manager of a local film company did bow out of sharing production costs because he was afraid of the script's political im-plications. But Kusturica refuses to blame Yugoslavia's Communist and non-aligned, political system. "It reminds me of the Western situation," he said. "You bring a script to a moneyman who thinks the film won't make fell in with a neighborhood gang enough money. He would refuse of Moslem youths like himself, of

Although Kusturica disclosed that he, like the film's main character, sleepwalked as a child and that his father is a state official and Communist Party member unlike his mother and himself he rejected a suggestion that the film's story contained antobiographical elements. Nor does he consider his film political. He and his scriptwriter, Abdulah Sidran, first saw it as the story of the mother, a victim both of her husband's unfaithfulness and the price he paid for it - denunciation by his mistress and imprisonment. The boy became the film's focus as work progressed. "My point of view had been hiding very deep inside me," the director explained. "It stems from a bitterness at what I see in the world as a whole, not specifically in this system. I think peering deeply into the soul of any person would not reflect favorably on the system in which he lives. Even a big hero is also a great loser."

Kusturica describes himself as having the same disabused view of all countries of the world. His skepticism extends also to the United States, which he recently visited on a six-week tour arranged by the United States Information Agency. "I saw a huge and powerful country," he said. In California I saw beautiful houses, but the people do not have time to live in them."

The director's life has always allowed for time to live, always in Sarajevo, except for four years at the Prague Film School. He pointed outside the window of the llashy Holiday Inn, built for last year's Winter Olympics, to a solid front of high-rise apartment buildings of the same vintage. "I grew up behind those houses," he said. "It was a simple life, in a part of town where the poor and the well-off - as well off as you can be in a socialist country came together. I saw life as it was there very clearly. So clearly that I couldn't make a film now about the lives of rich people." The Kusturica home did not incite aspirations that went be-yond soccer, the director said. He

which he was the most middleclass. "We were always running from the police," he recalled. "I was glad to have had such a peri-od in my life. I would know how to make a film about stealing wallets. I never did myself, but I watched many times."

His parents, trying to wean Emir from bad company, suggested that he go to Prague, where an aunt was living. A friend of Kusturica's father, a movie director, suggested the city's film school.

The young Emir soon developed an enthusiasm for what started as the family's way of keeping him out of trouble. "I felt that making a film gives you a chance to put together all your experience and knowledge," he Though Kusturica won a prize for the first short he produced at the school, the work seemed totally outside the experience of a young Moslem from Sarajevo. It was called "Guernica," after the Picasso painting, and was set in a European city in 1941. A Jewish family is ordered to report to a physician to be examined to determine whether they are Jews. To calm his son's fears, the father tells him the doctor is to check whether their noses are too long. Frightened, the son gathers all the family photographs and cuts off the noses. Then, recalling the painting "Guernica," which he had seen with his father, he assembles the mutilated photos in a composition in the style of the masterpiece.

After winning a prize for a television picture he made when he returned to Yugoslavia, he received the chance to direct his first feature movie. "Do You Remember Dolly Bell?" - about a Sarajevo boy's discovery of love - was awarded the Golden Lion for a director's first film at the 1981 Venice Festival, "When Father Was Away" was his second film. And, no, Kusturica said, matter-of-fact and unsmiling, he has never made a picture that did not receive a prize.

While he is unimpressed by the honor. Kusturica values the utility of prizes. He met Harry Saltzman, the American producer. after Cannes. They agreed on two pictures, both to be shot in Yugoslavia including international ac-tors. "It means I can work under better conditions," Kusturica said. The first, "The Spirit Wrestlers," will deal with a sect of Russian Christian fundamentalists who emigrated to Canada in 1905.

Kusturica is enthusiastic about the second project. "It will be very important, my biggest venture, the biggest film ever made in Yugoslavia," he said, sounding al-most excited. It will be based on "The Bridge on the Drina," a novel by Ivo Andric, the Yugoslav Nobel Prize-winner, that is a Bi-ble for the people of the Balkans. Meanwhile, Kosturica tries to come to terms with success. "Everything that happened went against my character, but I am learning to live with it," he said.

"I am trying to do something very difficult," he said. "This or-dinary life, which I love very much -I want to continue it as it is. And at the same time, make better films." And he added. without changing his serious tone, play soccer.
